Sound Masking

Open Offices have one thing in common = NOISE or SILENCE. If it is so quiet you can hear a pin drop or hear everyone's conversation than Sound Masking is the solution for your space. It provides an ambient sound level that is a quiet "hush" that creates an efficient environment and supports that true spirit of the open floor plan.

WHY SOUND MASKING

SILENCE IS NOT ALWAYS GOLDEN

With the Schneider Electric's Workplace of the Future's open office plan, proper attention to acoustic design has a measurable effect on the bottom line.

Many spaces that are perceived to have a noise problem actually have a quiet problem. You can hear and understand many of the conversations around you. Sound, like many things in life, is best understood in relative terms. We have all heard someone say "I can't hear you," while the water is running or observe, "It was so quiet, you could hear a pin drop." These are statements concerning the relative level of sound; that is, relative to the background or ambient sound level. We hear that dripping faucet only when the house is quiet...usually when we are trying to sleep.

It is very important to remember that Silence is Not Golden where speech privacy and overall comfort in the office is concerned. This is especially true of open plan space. "The quieter the better," is not what provides for a comfortable, efficient environment. Silence is very disconcerting to most people and must be avoided.
